As the son of a Greek immigrant family, and since the completion of my studies in business economics and my ongoing work as a business consultant, I have operated within the friction areas between ethnically diverse individuals and organisations. Thus I have both, a deep understanding of an individual's need to be valued and recognised, as well as an organisation's economic financial interests and goals.

In this context, I consider these disparities in thoughts and actions to be a resource for myself, for others and for organisations. By utilising this resource effectively, vivacity, flexibility, competence to solve problems and the ability to build good relationships, can emerge.
